Mr. Lee: So, Sarah, (13) you thought more about what you'd like to study at university?
Sarah: Yes, a little. There's so much I want to study, but I'm not sure what to choose. It feels like such a big decision.
Mr. Lee: That's completely normal. Many students feel that way. The first thing I'd (14) is to think about what subjects you enjoy—not only what you're good at, but what really excites you.
Sarah: I enjoy writing and reading, but I also like helping people, so I was thinking about English or maybe psychology.
Mr. Lee: Both are strong options. English could lead you into teaching, writing, journalism, or publishing. Psychology is great if you're (15) in how people think and behave, and it opens doors to counselling, social work, or even research.
Sarah: But what if I choose the (16) thing?
Mr. Lee: Don't worry about that. You can always change your course. And many people end up with a career that's not directly linked to their degree. What matters most is that you're (17) skills, such as critical thinking, communication, and problem-solving.
Sarah: That makes me feel a bit better. I just don't want to waste time.
Mr. Lee: You won't. Choosing something you care about is never a waste. Speak to some of your other teachers, read about careers, and (18) your time. There's no need to rush. You don't need to have it all figured out now.
Sarah: Thanks, Mr. Lee. That really helps.
